01

The most discreet house

On the Avenue de Champagne, a UNESCO World Heritage site, one house has always kept its secrets. Since 1837, the De Venoge mansion has stayed out of sight: it is the most discreet house on the avenue. Closed to the public, it opens its doors by reservation only, and for a few guests at a time. This is not a tour one follows. It is a house in which one is received.

A nineteenth-century mansion, the house reveals from room to room the stained-glass window by Jacques Gruber, listed as a Historic Monument, which bathes the great staircase in light.

The treasure of the House is not measured in surface area, but in bottles. The De Venoge Vinothèque holds nearly 40,000 old bottles, one of the largest collections in Champagne: the living memory of the House, long kept for the family and its close friends. To enter it is a rare privilege.
